

Curtis Baron

Curtis has over twenty years experience in roles spanning security, technology and resilience. He has led global risk functions for several banks and delivered major risk remediation programmes.

Curtis is currently the Global Head of Audit for Cyber Security and Resilience at Barclays Bank and the Head of Technology Audit for Barclaycard and Barclays UK.

Prior to his current position Curtis was a director within KPMG's Cyber Security practice. In this role he helped multi-national clients understand and reduce their level of exposure to security and resilience-related risks.

In 2013 he was appointed to the Advisory Board of the London First Security and Resilience Network, a non-profit organisation that works closely with the UK government, law enforcement and industry to promote London as a safe and secure place to do business.

Curtis has a strong track record of influencing strategic change at board level and delivering sustainable programmes that protect complex organisations from a broad range of disruptive threats. He is regularly invited to speak at industry conferences and has contributed to numerous industry publications, including the World Economic Forum's Annual Risk Report.
